Failing in procuring transportation to the srmy, I left Rolia and traveled to Springfield on foot, loaded down with all of a soldier's paraphermalia for war; at night sleeping upon the hard floor of a Missouri cabin, or upon the ground, in the open air. For the most part, the country is rough and rocky, with few inhabitants, and few inducements for settlement. Many of the houses on the rout, are abandoned and unoccupied. Many are burned—fines are torm down, and scarce a mile but presents sad evidences of vandalism. Springfield, once the most next and flourishing town in Southwestern Missouri, were it not for the army and its appendages, would be almost a deserted reim—a slient city in a desert.
